

Monkey see - monkey do!

Once upon a time there was a man who sold hats.

One day he was travelling through the forest when his cart hit a stone in the road.

Unfortunately, all the hats spilled out onto the road. As soon as the monkeys in the trees saw the hats, they swung down and grabbed them as quick as a click.

First the man shouted at the monkeys but all that the monkeys did was to shout back because - what a monkey sees, then a monkey does!

Next the man shook his fist at the monkeys but all that the monkeys did was to shake their fists back because - what a monkey sees, then a monkey does!

After that the man threw a stick at the monkeys but all that the monkeys did was to throw sticks back at the man because - what a monkey sees, then a monkey does!

Sadly, the man rubbed his eyes and began to cry but all that the monkey did was to rub their eyes and cry because - what a monkey sees, then a monkey does!

Finally, the man was so fed up that he knew that he would never see his lovely hats again so he threw his own hat onto the ground and began to push his cart towards the city - but all that the monkeys did was to throw their hats onto the ground because - what a monkey sees, then a monkey does!

At that moment, the hat seller looked behind him and to his amazement all his hats were back on the ground.

He looked up into the trees but there was not a monkey to be seen.

They had all chased off to another part of the forest where one of them had seen a gingerbread man being chased - because whatever a monkey sees then a monkey does!
